Transcript	So... it was Friday evening. We had an argument. He left... On Saturday he didn't come back. I waited all day. He was supposed to go help Eric out with something out on the Saturday afternoon ... they had a job. He didn't show. So Eric was ringing on the phone. I checked at the Rock, that's our local. They said they'd seen him on the Friday night, but not since. He still wasn't back this morning, which just isn't like him at all. Still not back by dinner time. It's getting dark, again. So I decided to come see you. His parents haven't heard anything either...

She'd been speaking about old stuff. Sad stuff. About when we lived there. About the baby. There's some boxes in the cellar. Nursery stuff. Stuff we never needed and I never had the heart to throw out. And I suddenly remember that when I'd looked down there the week before... ...those boxes... that pile was in the wrong place. I went cold all over. I went down there with a torch and went straight to the back... ...and that's when I saw the bin bags.

Transcript	It's Rapunzel. The story starts when she's born. Mother Gothel, a witch, takes Rapunzel from her parents and keeps her locked up in this tower. Rapunzel gets pregnant by the prince. Mother Gothel is furious so she cuts off her hair and throws her— Actually, her hair is already short here so that's already happened. She throws her into the wilderness, and Rapunzel is reunited with the prince, who's blind... But she cures him with her tears and so it's a happy ending. Is that too much?

The main lock was unlocked. You can tell because the key doesn't turn when you try to turn it to the left. I walked in. Simon's coat wasn't on the peg. I couldn't see the shoes in the shoe rack. I shouted out. I walked straight into the kitchen because he usually sits in there to have a cup of tea... ..and read his paper. But he wasn't there. I touched the kettle. It was cold. I looked quickly in the living room. Nothing. So I walked upstairs to the bedroom. He wasn't there. I didn't search for him because it was pretty clear he wasn't there. I had a shower. The phone rang whilst I was in the shower. I didn't answer it. I think it was Eric. Then I was just exhausted so I lay down on the bed and I fell asleep though I didn't mean to. I woke up a couple of hours later and I was surprised to see no one in the bed next to me. And then I remembered where I was, and what had happened. That's when Eric called again. This time I spoke to him. Then I called Doug and Eleanor. And then I decided to come and see you. That enough?

That would be us returning the favour. Diane is a really good cook, into her trendy ingredients. The last time Simon got something off Masterchef. He got the recipe off Ceefax. And I did my Lloyd Grossman bit, commenting from the sidelines. I had to find fennel from the supermarket. Have you ever eaten fennel?

The taxi driver we paid to drop us off... I mean, we'd saved money, pinched a bit here and there, to pay for the fare... He was suspicious because we were so young so he told the police. So they came and picked us up and took me back to Portsmouth. My mum picked me up from the station. But I blamed everything on my friend Eve, so my parents sent me off.

Transcript	Nineteen Eighty Four. It was an awful year in the end. We were living at Doug and Eleanor's. I lost the baby at the end of spring and my parents died in the summer. It was a hot summer, a heat wave. So when they discovered the bodies it was just awful. Because of the circumstances, them dying together like that, they brought in a lot of police. And a forensic entomologist. I had to look that up. It was because of the heat. It was just awful.

Transcript	OK. I parked up on the street. It was busy so I parked down the end of the road. I walked up to the house. I knocked on the door. No answer. I took my keys out of my bag, unlocked the door. The main lock was unlocked. I could tell because the key wouldn't turn when I tried to turn it to the left. I walked in. Simon's coat wasn't on the peg. I couldn't see the shoes in the shoe rack. I shouted out for him. I walked straight into the kitchen. He usually sits in there to have a cup of tea and read his paper. He wasn't there. I touched the kettle. It was cold. I looked quickly into the living room. Nothing. I walked upstairs to the bedroom. He wasn't there. I didn't search for him, because it was pretty clear he wasn't there. Then I had a shower. Whilst I was in the shower, the phone rang. I think it was Eric, his boss. I didn't answer it. Then I came out and I was just exhausted... ...so I laid down on the bed and I fell asleep but I didn't mean to. I woke up a couple of hours later and I was surprised to see no-one in the bed next to me. And then I remembered where I was and what had happened. That's when Eric called again. I spoke to him. Then I called Simon's parents. And then I decided to come and see you. That enough?

Transcript	Across the road, when my parents first there, was a midwife called Florence. When Hannah was born, I was born at the same time. The midwife was there to help. I'd been throttled by the cord, probably wrapped around my neck by Hannah. The midwife told my mother I was dead. But I wasn't. She wrote all of this stuff in a diary. Amazing what people will admit to on paper.

When we first realised it wasn't a reflection. The reflection was staring back. I think I was five. It was my birthday. My reflection was wearing a party hat and waving. I knew what party hats were from books. And it suddenly occurred to me... Today must be my birthday. I waved back and... We just spent ages waving at each other and copying each other's movements.

Mother taught me at home. And I had books and TV. TV was magical. But it was only on when it wanted to be so... I spent a lot of time reading books.

Transcript	Florence was a warm, kind person. But she was broken, I guess. When I found her diary I also found a biscuit tin with other stuff in it. Older papers. Letters. That kind of thing. Her story was in here. I never really spoke to her about it, I was far too young to really understand. I guess I just put it together later. Once I was older. She had loved children, planned to have a large family. But her husband died in the war. That was back when you married for life. She never felt like she could marry again. Isn't that strange? She was a widow from her twenties. But I mean, I guess it was different then. You know, you married for life and she felt she could never marry again. I guess it was harder... a war widow. Honour the dead? I don't know. Maybe there was more to it than that. I don't really know.

Florence's family had a history of firstborn girls so they were convinced it was going to be a girl. It's hard to know if this is all true. These are stories I remember. It must have been taken up to the attic in parts, and then reassembled up there. It's a beautiful thing. Wallpaper to scale. Little furniture. The lights work. Mirrors, beds. Little duvets and pillows. We spent hours and hours playing in it. Inventing all these characters and families who lived there. We wrote paperwork for them all, passports, diaries. Gave them all really elaborate stories. Once, a moth got trapped in there. We'd left a light on. It was making the most horrendous noise. We tried to kill it, but it was tough. We ended up crushing it under a copy of The Arabian Nights.

Transcript	Mum and dad never had any reason to notice. They were always busy. If Hannah was eating a lot, they didn't mind. She didn't put on any weight. "That girl has a healthy appetite." If they heard us talking in the attic they just thought it was Hannah playing one of her games. And that Eve was our imaginary friend. Once, she was already up and dressed and ready to go to school and I snuck down for a piss. Mum saw me in my underwear and she went mad. "Get dressed this instant!" So I ducked into our bedroom and seconds later out came Hannah, dressed and ready! Mum was amazed.

Transcript	We were obsessed with fairy tales. Not just the pretty, pretty ones, but the traditional ones. They were dark and real. Bizarre and violent. Felt like life. We had this huge old book that I think mum must have bought from a library sale. The illustrations had thin tracing paper over them to protect them. They were in color. Shiny plates. At the front of the book was an index of illustrations. We read that more than the actual stories. We'd read aloud the captions and flick between the pictures. There was something intimate about peeling back the tracing paper, undressing the pictures. Rapunzel's hair is cut. The eagle plucks out his heart. The princess pricks her finger.

It was that way with Carl. Hannah met him first. She had such a crush. I let him take my virginity after a night that his band had played at. It got difficult. When I was with Carl, we would have sex, but Hannah couldn't. Couldn't let him see she was a virgin. She had lots of excuses. After a while, we decided that I should take Hannah's virginity. It's not that different to a bruise, pulling a tooth, a graze. We used a hairbrush. After that we took it in turns, though I was the one who always seduced boys. Until Simon.

Transcript	It lasted about six months. I tried to carry on but everything was different. Hannah insisted I not pretend to be her around Simon. Let alone sleep with him. We didn't share him like the others. The rules had changed. Me living in the attic had become weird in a way it hadn't been before.

Transcript	So, I moved out. Got a small bedsit. Got my tattoo to mark the occasion. I was singing in a bar in the evenings. So I had some money, enough money to cover my rent. I've been doing something similar ever since. I haven't put down any roots. I don't exist.

Transcript	He saw me singing. One of my shows. Pure chance. Not sure I remember what he was even doing there. Afterwards, I had a drink at the bar and he came over and we got talking. I knew who he was. Obviously, I knew who he was. But... He didn't know who I was. He was fascinated by the likeness. He guessed my name from my tattoo. Told me it was a palindrome like that would impress me. I enjoyed talking to him. It was amazing to be able to sit and interact and talk to him after all this time. He didn't tell me he was married. I'm not sure what he was thinking. He later told me it was like he was dreaming. A waking dream.

Transcript	Nothing else happened that night. We talked. The I said goodbye. Then next week, I was singing in the bar again and there he was. And again the next week. He offered to buy me a meal. I told him I had already eaten. And so we got chips and ate them on the beach instead. When we said goodbye he asked me to kiss him. Romantic.

Transcript	Yes. I thought about telling Hannah. I felt guilty after the kiss. But then it began to feel like this was the way it should be. Sharing, like we had before. He never mentioned her to me. There was the Simon with me and the Simon with her. It was almost like it was a different Simon. But...

Transcript	After the kiss. The next time... He took me back to the house. To our parents' house. To their house. So... it was definitely him. I sometimes think he wanted to get caught, to prove to himself that we were different people. He told me about his marriage, told me about his wife was completely different to me... I almost burst out laughing.

Transcript	I think it was that time, the first time, at the house, in his bed... ...that I got pregnant. Amazing, right? His fucking magic sperm. And they say lightning doesn't strike twice. I didn't tell him. I missed three periods. I had pretty irregular periods anyway, but three... I had always thought we were infertile, both of us. I didn't tell him. Just waited. Hannah and I were meeting for our birthday and... I told her because I thought she would be happy for us both. I think she was.

Transcript	This was nine, about nine? I went round and she was waiting for me. She was furious. And so angry. The kind of anger you can only have toward yourself. We screamed at each other. Argued. Cried. We fought. I hit her back, left a bruise. I had my wig on from performing. She tore it off. Eventually we grew tired of fighting and I left.

Transcript	It's like I told you before. I drove. I took the car and drove. I don't have my own car, but I have a spare set of keys. I just drove, north. I just wanted to to think, put some space between me and them. Everything I told you before is true. I stopped at Glasgow. I was tired, exhausted. I pulled out and I hit a car. My car was OK, but I was worried about the baby, so I went to A and E to get the OK. Everything was fine. Slept in the car. When I woke I tried to call Hannah from a pay phone. She wasn't answering. And then I decided to drive back. I had decided that she was more important to me than Simon.

Transcript	Her story was that she'd waited for him to come back. She put on my wig, some of my clothes. Pretended to be me. They talked. She'd enjoyed being me. He said he wanted to be with me. Then he took out a present. Another mirror. Just like the one he'd given her earlier. That unique present. She went crazy. Smashed the mirror. They argued. Screamed. He hit her. So she grabbed a piece of the mirror, just swung it round. She cut his throat clean open. She'd only meant to scare him off.

Transcript	It happened very quickly. We hardly had to talk to each other. We agreed almost silently. The baby was what mattered. We'd help each other. We cleaned up. We bagged up the broken mirror, her clothes. They're gone. We took him down to the cellar. We knew I, we, had an alibi and we wanted the body to be found later. We wanted to have suspicion on us, so that we could then disprove it... ..rather than have it linger. Better to keep the body in the house than risk being seen with it. The watch, that was my touch. To make sure the alibi stuck.
